Harewood House, in Yorkshire, the Seat of Edwin Lascelles, Esq.

HAREWOOD HOUSE, IN YORKSHIRE,

THE SEAT OF EDWARD LASCELLES, ESQ.

THIS noble mansion is situated in the West Riding of Yorkshire, about eight miles from Harrowgate, on the direct road from thence to Leeds, and two hundred from London. The house is very large, extending in front two hundred and fifty feet; and, for grandeur of style in the composition, and elegance of decorating and finishing, both externally and internally, deservedly ranks with the first buildings in this kingdom. The wings of the north front are enriched with emblematical medallions, executed by Collins, from the designs of Zucchi; in the center is a handsome pediment, supported by six three-quarter Corinthian columns, thirty feet in height, composing the entrance from a flight of steps to a noble hall of the Doric order, decorated with statues, urns, and other works of virtù, leading to a range of grand and elegant apartments, furnished with the utmost magnificence.

The south front has a noble portico of four columns; from whence the eye, passing over an extensive slope, is directed to a spacious sheet of water, gently winding in a serpentine course, beyond which the country forms one of the most beautiful scenes imaginable: and to the north, over a fertile vale, intersected by the river Wharfe, is seen Alms Cliff. This vast rock, which rises with prodigious grandeur, is visible at forty miles distance.

Near this seat are the remains of Harewood Castle, a place of great antiquity, and formerly, with the adjacent demesnes, belonging to the ancient family of the Gascoigne. There is also a small church, containing many ancient monuments; among which is one of Lord Chief Justice Gascoigne, who had the resolution to commit Prince Henry, afterwards King Henry V. to the King's Bench prison, for striking him at Westminster Hall, while he was on the seat of justice: for which proof of regard to the authority of the king, more than the image of his person, the prince himself, when he came to the throne, had the generosity not only to forgive, but to reward him.

This elegant mansion was built by the late Lord Harewood when Mr. Lascelles, and, on his demise, came to his brother Mr. Edward Lascelles, who, as did his predecessor, permits it to be publicly viewed every Saturday; and those who visit Harrowgate Spa, often make excursions to Harewood House.

Mr. Adam designed the principal front; Mr. Carr, of York, the rest of this elegant edifice; and to the late celebrated Mr. Brown, of Hampton Court, the pleasure-grounds are indebted for that profusion of beauty which renders them so universally admired.

Methley Hall, in Yorkshire, the Seat of the Earl of Mexborough.

METHLEY HALL, IN YORKSHIRE,

THE SEAT OF THE EARL OF MEXBOROUGH.

METHLEY HALL is situated in a fine open country in the West Riding of Yorkshire, within seven miles of Wakefield, and four of Leeds, both in the same county; being distant from London about one hundred and eighty-nine miles. It stands near the junction of the navigable rivers Air and Calder, which add much to the beauty of the situation.

The house is very ancient; but the antiquity of its appearance has been greatly diminished by the addition of an elegant new front, said to have been executed by Carr, of York.

TO THE PUBLIC.

THE collectors for local Histories will find in this Work many choice embellishments, at an astonishing easy rate, particularly as the prints in each number will generally be both in the same county; those on journies, an amusing companion when absent from their friends; and such as do not travel, a very cheap substitute for that enjoyment. It will, in a short time, at comparatively no expense, furnish an elegant and entertaining volume for the Library or Pocket, as, when bound, it will be near the same convenient size as the Books of Roads, to which it will form an agreeable addition; but if the prints are on a smaller scale than these, it is evident the most distinguishable parts of objects must be either disproportionably enlarged, to preserve their character, or so jumbled together, as will make it difficult to discern them. Another objection to a diminutive size is the multiplication of small cubic volumes, contemptible in the Library, lumpish in the Pocket, and so easily lost.

The Amateur and Practitioner in the Arts will find in this Work an entertaining variety, and many useful hints in the practice of drawing.
